/YOUR CHALLENGES

The automotive industry is in a state of fundamental upheaval. Tougher requirements concerning environmental sustainability, digitalisation, and changing mobility requirements mean new challenges for the industry's existing business models.

The ecological impact of fossil fuels requires companies to think about new forms of mobility. Innovative new means of propulsion range from the use of biofuels, hydrogen and natural gas to hybrid motors and completely electrified vehicles.

Digitalisation opens up new mobility concepts, with the possibility of autonomous driving and networked cars, but at the same time entails risks such as the software being infected by viruses or car-hacking. It essentially involves the monitoring and intelligent control of the car of the future and the associated data. New players such as internet service providers, software providers or technology companies will become cooperation partners, or alternatively competitors, of automotive manufacturers by entering into appropriately structured and secured agreements.

Mobility concepts such as car sharing are growing in importance. Nowadays, automotive manufacturers offer not only vehicles but also multimodal mobility services. The legal topics and questions arising in this context are many and varied.

In the distribution sector, automotive manufacturers are faced with the challenge of linking off-line and online trading. This entails restructuring the conventional organisation of sales and distribution and taking into account new legal possibilities for structuring these processes, allowing products such as new cars or services, parts and accessories to also be sold directly to the end-customer in the future and enabling the customer to use online functions in their car whenever required.

At the same time, in emerging markets characterised by increasing industrialisation there are new market opportunities waiting to be discovered – either for sales or as production locations.

In practice these developments present great challenges. We are ready and able to help you meet these challenges so that you are in a position to make the right decisions, minimise risks, and make the most of new opportunities.

We offer companies in the automotive industry sector-specific solutions for every situation and every project along the development, production, supply and distribution chains. We advise not only in special situations – such as the national and international development and expansion of markets and production facilities or refinancing, restructuring and product liability and recall cases – but also on questions arising in your day-to-day business.

During your projects you will benefit from our decades of experience in advising and representing a wide range of well-known companies with international operations from all fields in the automotive industry, both nationally and internationally.

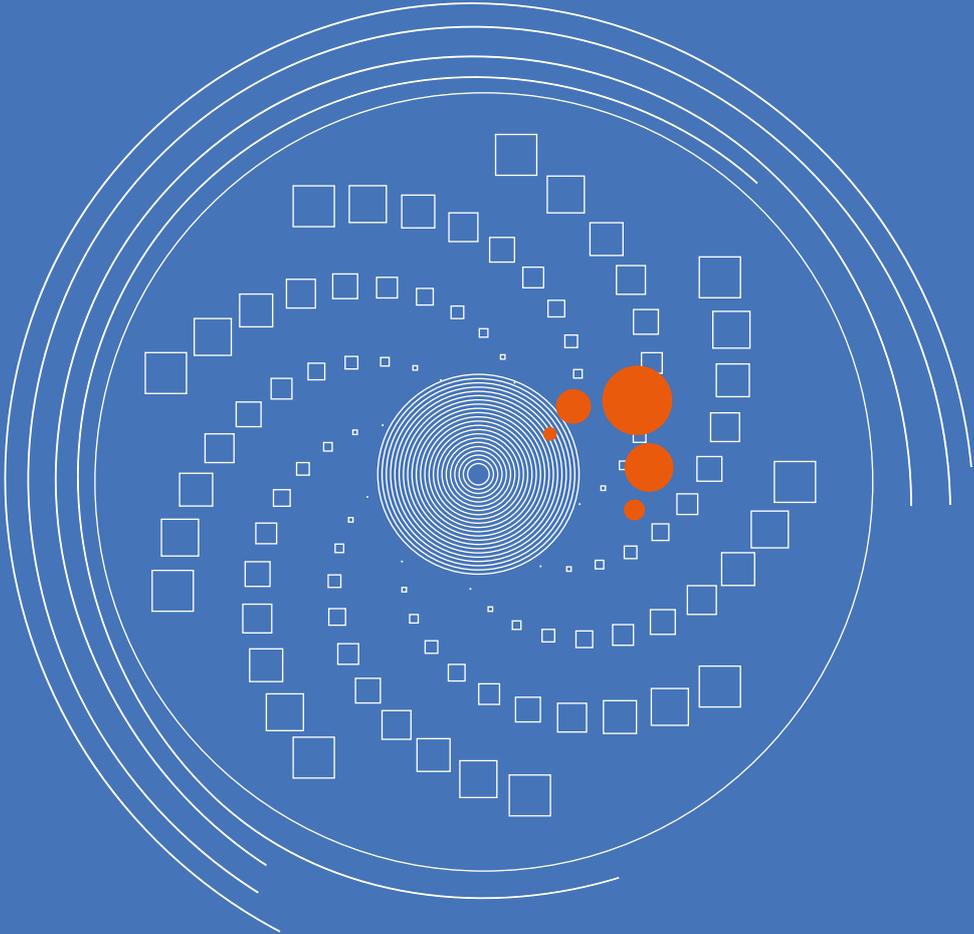

We have assisted many German companies from the automotive industry in their successful expansion to Central and Eastern Europe as well as Russia. With our help, one automobile manufacturer succeeded in enforcing a nationwide restructuring of its distribution network with a one-year notice period in the proceedings, which went as far as the Federal Court of Justice, in the first case of its kind; in this way it was able to achieve a leaner and more efficient distribution structure. We are currently developing future multi-channel distribution systems for automotive manufacturers which completely realign sales of new cars, services and parts and accessories via own-distributor networks in Europe and which are setting new legal, technical and entrepreneurial benchmarks. This also applies to the advice on digitalisation in the automotive industry we are providing for a consortium of companies from the automotive and IT industries who are aiming to facilitate the global exchange of software on various control devices in and for cars, for example to create a worldwide international standard for autonomous driving.

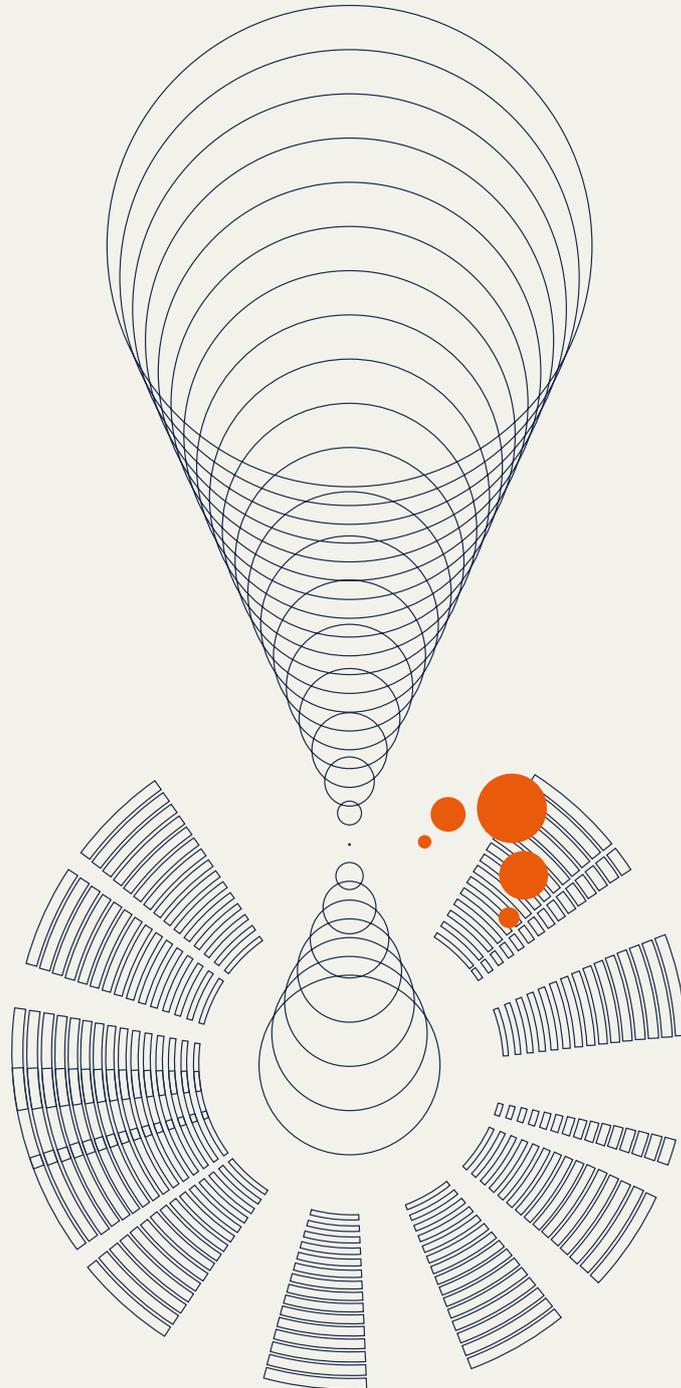

During our work we deploy bespoke teams comprising experienced advisors and spanning the various areas of expertise and, where appropriate, countries. This often includes experts in company, sales, antitrust, trade mark and competition law as well as IT law and data protection (in connection with new digital business models). Where necessary, lawyers experienced in product liability, litigation and arbitration complete the team. Our “new mobility” specialists also advise you on the legal aspects of new mobility concepts such as electromobility. Thus we are able to cover all the legal issues relevant for you and your projects – never forgetting that legal solutions always have to be commercially sensible, workable and practical.

Regardless of how complex or ambitious the challenge may be, and whether or not an automotive group or mid-sized automotive supplier is involved, we always provide our clients with an in-depth analysis and clear and convincing recommendations for action. This applies wherever you need us – in Germany, Central and Eastern Europe and via our tried and tested relationships with recognised law firms worldwide.
